QUESTION 31 to 33

Instruction

1. Read the following extract from “COMMUNITY MANAGEMENT OF DEVELOPMENT: HOW CAN WE MAKE IT HAPPEN?” “By: Marsha Berman, Papua New Guinea © 2000

Development is a process of growth and of change. It is a creative process. A successful community development project is a creative process. As such each development project is unique and has its own particular challenges and obstacles to overcome.

Nevertheless, in Papua New Guinea today some obstacles are common to all types of community development projects, whether technical or social. Today we often find that some major obstacles to development do not come from outside, but from within the community itself.

Regardless of the nature of the project - whether social, technical or economic - these obstacles are the same because they are not rooted in the project (whatever the project may be) but are rooted within the community itself.

As we are now approaching 25 years of independence as a nation, it is time to assess our successes and failures in our own development not only on the national level, but on the community and individual level as well.

In fact, already in 1994, evaluation of the state of rural development led the national government to the conclusion that it had failed "to deliver goods and services to the people". This was the reason for the constitutional reforms known as The Provincial and Local Level Government Reforms, which were passed by national government in 1996 and (check date) officially implemented as of October 1997.

The key principles of the reforms are self-reliance and bottom-up planning as opposed to reliance on government (handouts) and other top-down political, administrative and implementational structures to determine our future and achieve our aims in life. In fact, the right of rural communities to self-determination was fixed with the introduction of the '5-year Ward Development Plan' strategy. It has become one of the important duties of each elected Ward Councilor to formulate long-term aims and goals for the development of the Ward area, thereby in fact empowering each Ward to formulate its Councilor's duty statement as development facilitator, and every community to write its own history.

The key concepts identified of the Reforms accurately address real problem areas and real needs for change, in order to increase opportunities for rural communities to improve their quality of life. However, how can we increase the communities' capacity to actually successfully make use of the opportunities provided? To achieve this, it is not sufficient to reform the administrative, political and legislative systems that serve us. We must also reform our own attitudes of mind which prevent us from achieving our own aims.
